Alex' Story: Shriners Help a Young Man Help his Family in Mexico

By Cameron E. Johnston

In a country like Mexico, where so much depends on the family breadwinner's ability to go to work each day, any kind of illness can spell disaster. A severe illness or disability may force the entire family to be come, literally, a charity case.

When Alejandro (Alex) Bernardino was 14, he quit school to help out his diabetic father with the family "business" - standing outside a grocery store and washing cars for Canadian and American snowbirds and retirees in the Mexican town of Ajijic. It was a hand-to-mouth existence and even his mother was drawn into this backbreaking, no-future enterprise. Things became even harder as Alex' father's health deteriorated. On top of that, Alex had his own health issues. He had been born with deformed "club feet", so trying to stand on his feet all day, washing cars in wet footwear was painful experience.

"I couldn't walk very much because I got tired very soon," Alex now recalls. "Sometimes, I couldn't stand for a long time. I had to sit down a lot." Not surprisingly, this affected the whole family's earnings.

Eventually, health issues became too much for the Bernardino family. Both Alex and his father were forced to quit work. The family moved into a children's shelter operated by a local charity. Alex's mother became the house-mother for a group of young boys who had been placed there by child welfare authorities, and Alex became their "big brother". It was unpaid work but it provided a roof over the family's head, and meals each day.

But as the expression goes, when one door closes, another one opens. Alex had made some important contacts while he was washing cars. He met others at the shelter. Those friends were members of the Lake Chapala Shrine club.

Noble Doug and Lady Diane Scrimgeour (Mocha Temple, London, Canada) made people aware of Alex's plight and introduced him to Noble Perry King and his Lady Moonyeen (Moslah Temple, Fort Worth, Texas). They also brought Dr. Jorge Gonzalez, a local orthopaedic surgeon, who was associated with the Shriners, into the picture. In March, 2009, Alex underwent surgery to correct his deformed feet at a hospital in Guadalajara. The cost was covered by the Shriners. Although the procedure went off without a hitch, Alex was still unable to walk for another two months. "I felt like such a carga, - a burden" he said, searching for the right word in English.

Alex was unable to walk for another two months, but during that time, he spent his days going over his English drills. Two more members of the Shrine, Noble Moe and Lady Willie Keller (Ramses Temple, Toronto, Canada) took Alex under their wing and paid for more English lessons and computer training. For the past year, Alex has had a part-time job at Colegio Del Lago, in Chapala, teaching introductory English to primary school children.

Nobles (L-R) Moe Keller, Perry King and Doug Scrimgeour, with Alex Bernardino, in Chapala, Mexico

The Kellers pledged to support Alex in his long-term goals, including pursuing his dream of going to university. In May, Alex wrote the entrance exams (one entirely in English) for the University of Guadalajara. He is the first in his family ever to graduate from any kind of school. His high-school graduation diploma hangs on the wall in the family's little kitchen; his mother's face bursts with pride as she proudly shows it to visitors.

Without the generosity of local Shriners in Mexico - the Kellers, Scrimgeours, and the Kings, Alex would have been heading for a life of low-paying and continued poverty. Now he can look forward to a wide-open future, a university education and a full and active life.

"I can play soccer on Sundays with all the kids, with my cousin and my brother - things I could never do before," he said. "I am really happy."

"I am never going to forget these people. Never. They gave me so much. My high school, my English lessons, and they paid for the operations on my feet. They were very interested in me and I will never forget that," he said.

"The Lake Chapala Shrine Club is a small group of people that does a lot of big work," says President Noble Perry King. In 2010 alone, the Shrine Club paid the transportation costs for 84 children and their families to go to Mexico City where the children could receive the specialized medical help they needed. An additional 21 children were sent to clinics and hospitals in Guadalajara for treatments.
